It is regretted that a mistake appears in Tract No. 1, at page 21. It was the sporting activities of Daniel nor Maurice which evoked Hunting Cap's spleen. See page 272, vol. ii., Last Colonel

ELLEN O'CONNELL, OF CARHEN

- K Ellen, 3rd dau. of Morgan O'Connell, was probably b. in 1777. She m. Daniel O'Connell, of Tralee, her third cousin. He was known to the family as "Splinter." His miniature was in existence in 1910, and a photo of it exists. Its present whereabouts are unknown. "Splinter" was an attorney-at-law in Tralee. His father was Daniel O'Connell, and his mother Miss Murphy. He had at least two brothers, Lt. John O'Connell, of the 43rd Regt., who, after a gallant career in the Peninsular war, was killed in action at San Sebastian, and Rickard O'Connell, Asst.-Surgeon of the 43rd Regiment. Rickard d. before 13 Feb., 1824, and was the father of Major Edward Maurice O'Connell, of the 99th Regiment (Ensign, 22 May, 1829, Capt., 28 April, 1837, and Brigade Major to his cousin, Sir Maurice Charles Philip O'Connell, K.C.H., at Sydney, in 1844/45). The descendants of Major Edward appear to be extinct with the death, 19 July, 1922, of Maurice Edward O'Connell in Australia. "Splinter" was a grandson of Geoffry O'Connell (Sheara na moe mor) of Kilkeeveagh, who d. in 1722. Sheara was the son of Maurice O'Connell, of Dunmaneheen, who was the brother of Captain John O'Connell, first of Darrynane. "Splinter" and Ellen lead an unhappy life and soon separated. She returned to Darrynane, where she lived with her uncle, Maurice. There was one child of the marriage, Catherine, and when she married, then Ellen joined the order of nuns founded by Nano Nagle, and died of a fever contracted whilst nursing the poor of Cork. The child,

JOHN O'CONNELL, OF GRENA

- L John, third son of Morgan O'Connell, of Carhen, was b. on 6 May, 1778. He did not have the same advantage of education abroad as did his brothers. He was, indeed, a vivid personality, and needs an appreciation of more than a few lines. I can find no trace of a picture of him, but he is described as a fine-looking, athletic man, plain in face and dark in colour. In this he was more alike to his brother. "the Liberator", than to his brother James. He was a man of great height and bulk and dressed and behaved very much as befitted a country squire, which it was his delight to be. The first record I have of his activities is a correspondence between
